

A PERFECTLY APOLITICAL STATEMENT

@golg4ppa*

Department of Irony (YEAH)

Paper Published Date: 4th April 2026

REFERENCES

[1] "your mom"

[2] "ts is a joke"

[3] "pls help"

[4] "your mom again"

COMMENT BY THE REVIEWER

A little disclaimer that having a highly critical stance on the subject matter, I believe this review might reflect my personal biases. Firstly the boldest thing about this research paper that I couldn't help but notice is the references section the author has carefully curated attempting to desolate it from anything political but I'd have to point out that terms like 'joke', 'help' & 'mom' are highly political no matter how they sound on the surface. Another point I will have to make about the references section is that it is poorly formatted but on the brighter side it is a genius choice to reflect the subject matter as any of the existing citation formatting would've been highly political. Now if I specifically talk about the statement made in this paper - the silences I could read between those highly "apolitical" sentences reflects what I could describe as the quiet of the powerful regimes when the political systems they have to condemn are their diplomatic allies, the quiet cowardice that they describe as "Safeguarding national interest". To sum up I'd call this "A brilliant piece or work" portraying how there is truly nothing such as 'A perfect apolitical statement'. The title needs appreciation as well for using the literary device 'irony' aptly. (a review by @lowkeytaiyaba)